

Problem Statement

Students, and people in general, struggle to keep track of their many tasks and deadlines, which can lead to failure and missing out. This issue especially affects college students that balance classes, jobs, and extracurricular activities. To fix this, I propose an organization app that combines three primary tools—a calendar, notes, and checklist—into one simple interface. Users can either type or speak their information into the app. If conflicting information is entered, the app will display a clear choice or a confirmation chat to ensure correct information. Solving this problem is important because staying organized and being aware of upcoming tasks can be the determining factor in graduating, and also help students with stress.
